Wendell Phillips.

A Beston correspondent of the New York Herald, under date of 2d inst. says:

I asked Mr. Phillips if he did not intend to reply to the numerous criticisms which had been made on his Philadelphia address. Mr. Phillips-Of course not. I never notice such criticisms. Beside, those who make them have either not read my speech or are not fit to read newspapers. I have anticipated and covered every point they refer to touching Mr. Dehe reads the speech attentively. Correspondent-But sir, they say Mr. Devens bought back Sims, furnished all the money and redeemed him; is that true?

veus. Any one who can count five will see it if

Mr. Phillips-No, he did not. Sims was sent back in 1851. About ten years afterward Devens woke up and offered to redeem him. In the previous efforts for Sims' re-lease Devens took no part. For many years the slaveholder refused to sell; he had Sims had punished the negro enough for running away sent him to Mississippi. For many years we heard nothing of him and supposed him to be dead. Eleven years afterward the war freed him and he came to Massachusetts. This statement shows how absurb is the idea that Deveus' offer to buy Sims was full atonement. All Devens' money did not and could not release Sims from the wretched fate to which the slavehound had sent the negro. This idea, that a few hundred dollars are full compensation for mortal sin and grave wrong done your fellow man is heartless and cruel, as | no doubt of the bargain that sold us out. well as absurd. The wrong once done the victim is beyond your reach. It is as if you gave a man a mortal wound and then offered the physician thousands to cure him. For all the wretcheduess and wrong Sims suffered during those eleven years Devens is largely responsible. Aster had a crazy son who kneeked out an attendant's eye with the iron tip of his cane. The man writhed in agony. Young Astor said, "What do you cry for ? My father will pay for it." The editors who claim that Devens' thensand dollars were a full atonement are as eracy last item won day Gould and his pocketpiece, as young Astor. But if Devens had bought the Tribune We shall see the bargain carried hims and been in any way able to fully compendute out soon. This delay and commission are only sate the negro that would not cover the whole ment would that have been to the Boston streets he had disgraced, to the humane hearts he had tornered? Would that have neutralized the coil of his information of the restriction will refer the national troops, itself the coil of his information of the descent. Increops once with a two blood and starvation will rule the South. There will be no republican State south of the Potomac. Of course no democratic Governor or Legislature will ever call for the national troops, extent of the evil he had done. What atoneized the evil of his infamous example." The nets of public men educate the people. The wicked servility of those days has done more show it for centuries. Correspondent-But, sir, they say Mr. De vens repented. Is his repentance nothing Mr. Phillips -Mr. Devens has never, to my knowledge, uttered, either publicly or in private, the word "repent." His offering money to buy Sims does not show repentance. I never knew a slave case where the most heartless of the hunters did not, immediately after, offer to aid in redeeming their victim. That family which was most active in sending Burns to EDW'D. S. LEADBEATER. THOS. LEADBEATER. | chains all contributed to buy him back. But every one of them gloried meanwhile in the part they had taken in Burns' surrender. Instead of repenting they boasted for years after of what they had done. If Deveus does repent, I claim that his repentance shall be as public as his sin; otherwise the effect of a bad example runs on unchecked. I do not think much of the conscience which sins in Einte street, in the daylight, at the head of 1,000 soldiers, amid plaudits, and then repents in a skulking private letter to Mrs. A B C. But neither in private letter nor in any public act does there than anything else to dull the American conscience and make us the corrupt people we are to-day. Scratch a sapling and the oak will exist the slightest evidence that Devens has ever repented. Correspondent-Men say, sir, that Mr. Dayens was a United States officer, and bound to hunt slaves if applied to? Mr. Phillips-He was United States Marshal. But no man is obliged or authorized to hold on to an office if his conscience forbids the act his office calls him to do. Every sane man agrees to this. As Devens held on to his office I have a right to infer that his conscience justified him in the act he was called to do. This is all I have charged on him, and I have estimated the lowness of his moral nature by the fact that he was unable to see the infamy of slave catching. Why did not be resign? How his letter of resignation would have rung throughout the land, rousing its conscience and lifting its young men to a higher moral level! Granville Sharpe resigned his place in the English War Office rather than sign, as a more clerk, the order sending troops to America in our Revolution. Is it too much to expect that a Massachusetts lawyer shall have as keen a sense of honor as an Eog-lish gentleman? Charles Summer was a united States Commissioner, authorized and bound to execute the Fugitive Slave act. When one asked him, if he, as Commissioner, would order the return of fugitive slaves, he answered, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing? I was a man before I was a Commissioner." When the Boston police was ordered out to help the surrender of Burns, Mr. Joseph K. Hayes, captain in that force, resigned his place rather than aid in that wick edness. Could not four years at Harvard College and ten years at the bar teach. Devens as much morals, waken in him as keen a sense of honor as service in the police had given Hayes? No, Devens deliberately chose to go on and earn his salary at the risk of earning the the disgust of all honorable men. He has had the blood money, ate it or lail it up. He must not whine if the disguet of mankind clings to him, like Nessus' shirt in the classic fable, and torments him forever. Correspondent-But, sir, other man beside Devens supported the Fugitive Slave law.

Mr. Phillips—True. But it is a very different thing to justify, intellectually, a law which will torture men a thousand miles off, from what it is to torture one of those men with your own hands. The mind may be blinded and confused. the heart, which, as Madison said, is "the best the neart, which, as manison said, is "the best logician." Sterne's picture of the single prisoner is more effective than whole folics on penaltiess. Or Johrson said, "the man who could hear of the sinking of the whole Chinese Empire ato the ser without emotion might possibly faint at seeing the surgeon cut off his neighbor's little finger." I heard Benjamin R. Cartis, Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, uphold the Fugitive Slave act in Fanauli Hall in an elaborate speech. Ten days after ward the hunters were in search of a negro who marked for Judge Costis. The Judge ways the worked for Judge Curtis The Judge gave the man money and helped his flight to Canada. Curtis could not resist the mute appeal of that single black thes. Devens could Curtis' ina pinty showed ne was a man, in spite of his wicked argument in Faneuil Hall.

Devers' heartless indifference proves him a hound, not a man. To return a fugitive slave is as near the sin against the Holy Ghost as any thing I can imagine. Corres, ontent-The journals, sir, scold great deal about your attack on Devens.

Mr. Phillips—Yes. 1 see the Tribune and the Springfield Republican scold me for expressing my disgust toward him. I certainly shall not criticise them. Mr. Reed and Mr. Bowles know best what company they like and are fit for. If they feel at home in the society of slave catchers I am sure I see no reason why they should be a like the chieft of the state not. Of course I shall not object. A slave hunter can never "mount high enough to reach the level of my contempt," to borrow Guizot's words. In the other world I leave such a sin-ner to the mercy of God. But in this world, if a slave hunter should buy back his victim, then repent as publicly as he had sinned, and afterwards live a hundred years and take a Turkish bath every day, he would be to me, at the end of a hundred years, nasty, in both the English and in the American sense of the word. Of course I do not dictate to others. It American editors fancy the society of slave catchers, certainly such editors are the best judges what company they themselves belong to.

I used only one of my arrows against Devens.

Every Massachusetts man remembers that in 1862 he was candidate for Governor in that revolt against the republican party which sought to prevent Andrew's re-election and Sumner's return to the Senate. Hayes seems to have a special liking for men who, like Schurz and Devens, have done their best in critical moments to stab the republican party.

Correspondent-What do you think, sir. of Wade Hampton? Mr. Phillips-In every sentence he has uttered on his way to Washington I can hear the crack of the old slaveholding whip. Since 1860 I have not heard the crack of that whip until cruelly whipped, and when he thought he Hampton sent that insolent letter to Grant. If we had to day a man in the White House Hampton would never be admitted there after such insolence. If I read the signs correctly, the > and he will soon hear a warning growl along the ground tier. Correspondent-Why not wait, sir, and let the administration have time to try its experipeople have more self-respect than Hayes has, ment? Mr. Phillips-For two reasons. The President's friends have sold us out. It is no experiment, but a treacherous bargain, and, besides, the steps they are going to take are very peri lious, and once taken are irreverable. There is republican papers very properly held Tilden responsible for his nephew's (Pelton's) acts, though Tilden never knew each detail. So I hold Hayes responsible for his friends when they sold him out to the white South. The bargain is plain. On the one side the democrats were to stop lilibustering and let Hayes be counted in. On his side his friends agreed to with-draw the troops; second, to recognize Nicholls and Hampton as Governors; third, to charter the Southern Pacific Bailway, giving away millions of national acres and millions of national bonds. (Let workingmen take notice.) This to let us down easily and accustom the public mind to the descent. The troops once withdrawn and hence no solider can cross the sacred boundarwline of a State Henry Wilson confessed to me that our great mistake was in lifting those territories, after the war, into States. Then there will be a "solid South"-the old slave power under a new name. The next Congress and the next Prezident will be democratic unless the North becomes a volcano. Then you will see millions added to the national debt in the shape of pensions to Contederate soldiers, loans to the Southern States and railways, payment of half the State debts, &c. When that hell opens you will see Hill and Lamar put off their company clothes and their disguise of good behavior. They will appear in their own proper persons. You will not see Lamar, the actor, performing rhetoric over Sumner's dead body. But you will hear Lamar, the Southern white, shamelessly

"You understand, I saw the carcass and used it to hoodwink the Yankees." COMMISSION MERCHANTS.
